MANAGEMENT OF PROFESSIONAL SERVICE FIRMS (PSF) & GENERAL OFFICE ADMINISTRATION
INTRODUCTION

In the histories and development of most professions, there seems to be a common trend; professionals and their practice firms often hold high ethical obligations and duties to parties other than their clients. Those parties are usually their regulators or professional associations. Therefore, managing the Professional Service Firms (PSF) can be very challenging. Although these firms are composed of very smart, well-educated and independent individuals; they mostly witness a high degree of employee turnover.

However, these professionals also serve multiple roles in their organizations; acting simultaneously as owners, managers and workers. Managerial challenges arise in the competitive marketplace as well confronting them with how to manage relationships, finances, people and processes; all of which were not a major part of their professional trainings. Notwithstanding, starting from medicine, law and consulting firms to architectural, engineering and advertising agencies, professional service firms (PSFs) are still part of the fastest growing sector in the global economy.

This course will focus on how to build and manage high-performing professional services firms. While there are many types of professional services firms – law, management consulting, accounting, information technology, engineering, and others – our aim for this course is to focus on elements that are similar across all firms. The central challenge for professional service firms can be stated quite simply: to find the right set of clients to buy their service offerings and to find a team (or individuals) who can satisfy the clients profitably, supported by a sound internal processes and procedures that do not violate professional ethics or regulatory guidelines.
